

There she is. The good old NSJ pool we all love and...wait. Where's the water? Man this pool DOES leak. Okay fine, so this is after we drained it to begin work. Not much but you gotta start somewhere.

Brace yourselves. It gets messier.

Gross. But still, not much happening yet.

Okay, now we're getting somewhere. Looks like they've scored the concrete and they're readying their cute little Bob the Builder truck. I asked if they would let me ride it. Nope.

A few days later and lookit, they're busting concrete. The goal is to break through the concrete decking and dig trenches around the sides of the pool to replace the pipes at the skimmers and return lines, the likely sources of leakage.

More busted concrete at the far end of the pool.

A few days later still and look at all the digging they've done. This shot was taken on Thursday, November 11th. No ancient burial ground uncovered yet.

Much of the work can only be done by a guy swinging a shovel, and let me tell you these dudes can dig. I once planted an azalea that took me all weekend. Then I called in sick on Monday. My hands had boo-boos.

That's all for now. We'll show you more as the project progresses.